Lorie has over 35 years of experience as a Licensed Registered Nurse and business executive, including many varied professional experiences in both hospitals and healthcare businesses. She started her career at NYU Medical Center as a registered nurse. Following that, she managed clinical trials for Pfizer Pharmaceuticals, Howmedica and Stryker Orthopaedics.

Lorie founded Healthlink Advocates in 2010 after identifying the need for individuals and companies to have a seasoned professional to assist them and guide them in navigating the healthcare system in times of illness and aging to avoid poor decisions, mistakes, higher costs, and stress.

Her focus is to ensure that patients are equipped with the knowledge and support necessary to make good medical decisions and obtain optimal healthcare. By providing one-on-one personalized patient advocacy support and in-depth education on illness and treatment options, she guides her clients to quality decision-making, minimization of stress and protection from duplication of tests and medical oversights.

In addition, Lorie recently became one of the first professionals to be nationally board certified as a Health & Wellness Coach. Healthlink Advocates is also proud to provide expert Health & Wellness Coaching to individuals and companies seeking to improve health outcomes and higher life functioning.
